Women Writers in History CEEPUS Network

Teaching and studying women writers from Central and South-Eastern Europe using digital materials and tools.

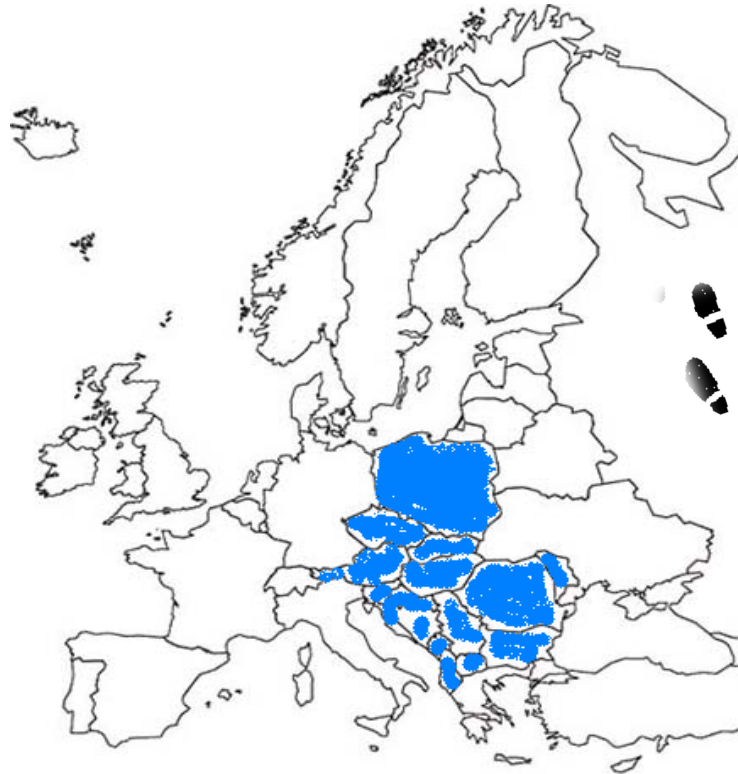

Women's writing in Central, Eastern and Southeastern Europe has always been transnational, and with the help of the digital humanities as a powerful tool, this important aspect can be brought back to light for researchers, students, and wider audiences. Many works by women writers have been translated and they sparked the interest of the society in the achievements of women in the literary field.

How does CEEPUS function?

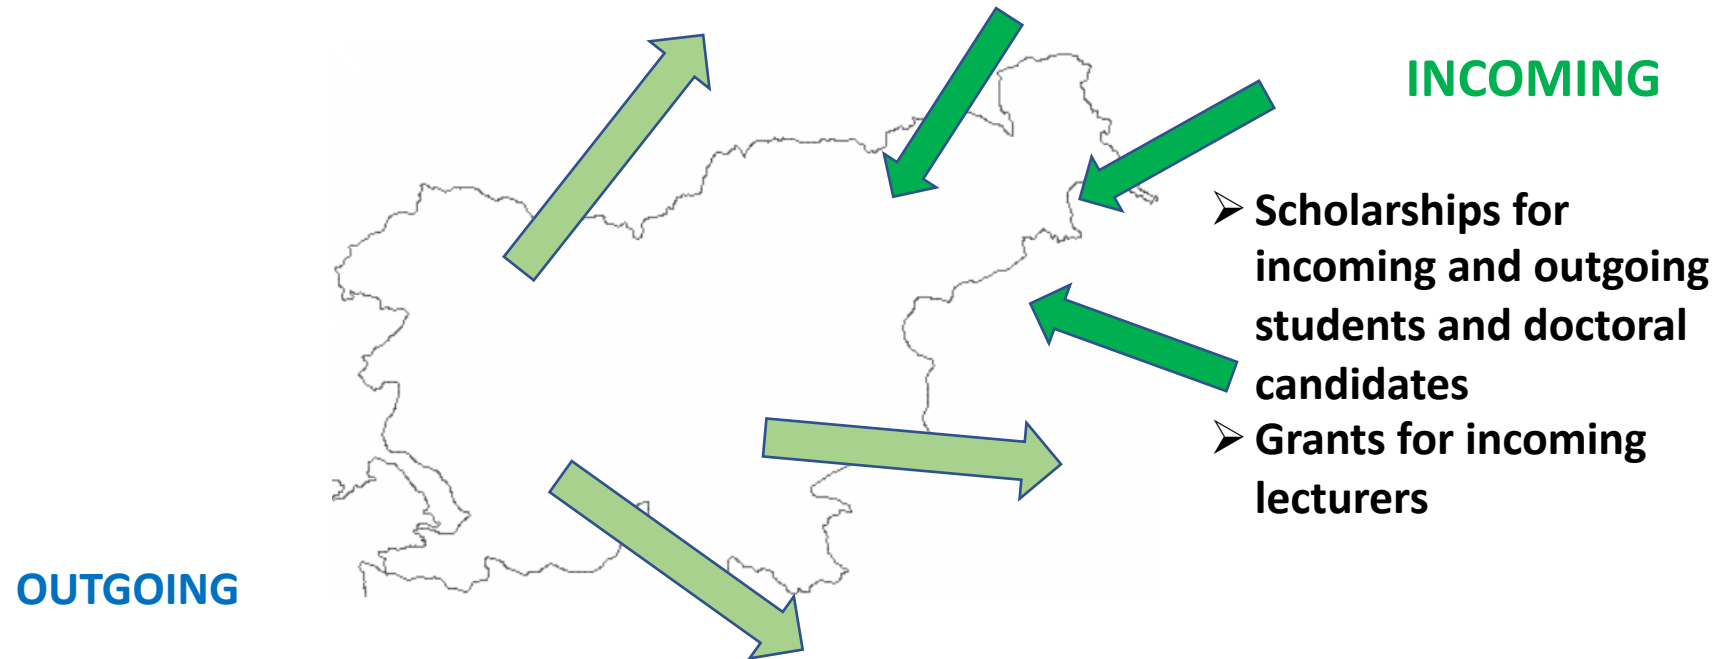

How does CEEPUS function?

- The scholarship / grant is always paid by the host CEEPUS country to “incoming” students and professors
- Exchange students are eligible for tuition fees, enrollment fees and other administrative costs (student cards of the University of Ljubljana are paid by CMEPIUS)
- Applications are made entirely through the CEEPUS website:
<http://www.ceepus.info/>
- Students and lecturers can go on a CEEPUS exchange several times (unlike the Erasmus program)
- CEEPUS does not know grants to cover administrative and / or organizational costs (ie operating grants)!

WHY WOMEN WRITERS?

I have something to say ...

Women Writers importantly contributed to the literary field, however their achievements are still not included in the academia courses in the same way as those of their male counterparts.
